L'Oreal Training Academy: Rooted in Tradition

The brand new grid-like space ropes in functional and contemporary elements together to produce a chic output. Amit Aurora and Rahul Bansal of New Delhi-based Group DCA have crafted a space that is modern yet “rooted in traditional wisdom”.

The most unique feature of the space is its physically transformable quality—the reception area, for instance, can be combined with two training cabins to create a wide open space. Several other partitions of the interiors can be moved. The furniture at L'Oreal Training Academy is custom-designed to be mobile.

L'Oreal Training Academy: Accessible to All

Innovation in design strategy is evident in every nuance of the project. The location of the academy, for instance, required a tactful design regime. This led to the evolution on site between two interconnected doors within a larger building.

Moreover, the lower floor is universally accessible (particularly for persons with disabilities). The landscaped terrace is also an extension of the academy's interior design; floor to ceiling windows provide beautiful views of the green outdoors. The upper floor has numerous rooms and partitions to serve the many functions of the L'Oreal Training Academy.
